USER GUIDE

This document is a brief guide and codebook for the American National Election Studies (ANES) 2024 Time Series Study, to accompany the full release of its pre-election and post-election data on August 8, 2025.

The ANES 2024 Time Series is a continuation of the series of election studies conducted since 1948 to support analysis of public opinion and voting behavior in U.S. presidential elections. The 2024 study features a mixed-mode design including in-person, internet, video, phone, and paper-and-pencil interviewing. Two separate fresh cross-sectional samples were drawn, one for use with in-person interviewing as the primary mode and the second for web interviewing as the primary mode. In addition, the 2024 study features a panel of respondents previously completed the ANES in 2016 and 2020, as well as interviews with individuals who previously participated in the 2024 General Social Survey (GSS).

Current Release

This is the full release of the 2024 Time Series Study dataset and the third release overall. The previous two releases were preliminary and did not contain all the variables, processing, cleaning, and documentation that are included in this release. Users are advised to compare their preliminary release results with the current release to determine if the changes have any impact on their analyses.

Although data from the General Social Survey (GSS) sample were collected alongside the ANES survey, they are not included in this release and will be released at a later date.

This full release may also include error corrections and edits to improve accuracy and usability. If you find errors or have comments or questions about the data, please communicate with ANES staff by writing to anes@electionstudies.org

Sample Design

The study has four independently drawn sample components:

1. Fresh sample for in-person interviews
2. Fresh sample for web interviews
3. Panel re-interviews
4. GSS re-interviews (not included in this release)

Another component of the study involved a brief interview with the spouses or partners of respondents in the fresh sample groups who were in spousal or cohabiting relationships.

Population. The two fresh samples for in-person and web interviews describe approximately the same population. The target population for the in-person sample was 232.5 million U.S. citizens age 18 or older living in the 48 contiguous states of the U.S. or Washington, D.C., and the target population for the web sample was 234.1 million U.S. citizens age 18 or older living in the 50 states or Washington, D.C. Both populations exclude those living in institutional or group quarters. In both modes, the sampling frame consisted of lists of residential addresses where mail is delivered. To be eligible to participate, a respondent had to reside at the sampled address and be a U.S. citizen aged 18 or older at the time of recruitment.

The ANES 2016-2020-2024 panel's target population consisted of U.S. citizens who were 18 or older and living in the 50 states or Washington, D.C., immediately before the 2016 presidential election.

The General Social Survey's target population was adult residents of the U.S. See GSS documentation for more information about GSS sampling. GSS re-interview data are not included in this data release and will be made available as a supplemental file.

Sample Design

Fresh in-person sample. The fresh in-person sample was a multi-stage stratified cluster sample. This is similar in general design, but different in details, from past designs of ANES Time Series studies. Sixty primary sampling units (PSUs) were selected from across the 48 contiguous states and Washington, D.C. The PSUs were metropolitan statistical areas (MSAs) or non-MSA counties, or combinations of counties, to achieve a minimum population of 50,000 adult citizens. PSUs were explicitly stratified by quintiles of county-level Republican vote share in 2020 and terciles of county-level turnout in 2020, and implicitly stratified by region, and then selected at random with probability proportional to the number of occupied housing units as indicated by the 2020 U.S. Census, except that Los Angeles County, CA, Cook County, IL, Harris County, TX, and Maricopa County, AZ, were selected with certainty.

Within each PSU, four smaller areas were drawn (secondary sampling units, which were Census Block Groups or groups of contiguous CBGs to form a minimum size of 100 occupied housing units), and households were selected at random from within these areas from the U.S. Postal Service's computerized delivery sequence file (DSF).

These secondary sampling units were explicitly stratified by the proportion of owner-occupied housing units (above-median or below-median within the PSU) and implicitly by the proportion of college graduates. Finally, the in-person sample addresses were explicitly stratified by the predicted average turnout (four categories, including no voter file match) and implicitly stratified by the predicted probability of voting for Trump in 2020. Probability of a Trump vote was calculated by (1) estimating a LASSO logistic regression model using ANES 2020 data (regressing ANES 2020 self-reported 2020 Trump vote over multiple variables from the voter file at the respondent level, (2) using the estimated model with the retained variables to estimate the probability of 2020 Trump vote for each voter matched to addresses selected in the sample, and (3) computing the average of these estimated probabilities over voters at the same address.

Fresh web sample. The fresh web sample was selected from the DSF in two phases from among residential addresses in all 50 states and Washington, D.C. In the first phase, the frame was explicitly stratified by quintiles of county-level Republican vote share in 2020, terciles of county-level turnout in 2020, and four census regions. A total of 40,000 addresses were selected in this phase. Then, in the second phase, 6,800 addresses were selected, explicitly stratified by the phase 1 strata above and also by predicted address average turnout in 2020 and 2022, and implicitly stratified by the address' average probability of a 2020 Trump vote.

Mode sample differences. The fresh in-person sample component of the study does not include respondents from Alaska or Hawaii, whereas the fresh web sample component does. This is the main substantive design difference in eligibility and coverage for the two fresh samples, and for most analytic purposes, it is probably ignorable because the combined population of Alaska and Hawaii is less than one percent of the study population.

Panel sample. Respondents who completed both the ANES 2016 and ANES 2020 studies were invited to participate again in the ANES 2024 study, except for a very small number of past respondents who opted out and asked not to be contacted again.

Respondent recruitment and retention

Pre-election study

Fresh in-person sample. An advance letter, including a study brochure and $5 in cash, was sent to each selected address. Following this, an interviewer visited the address to conduct a screening interview, which was used to randomly select one person from among the adult U.S. citizens living there to be invited for the 2024 interview. Those interviewed were given $25 or $50 during the initial phase of the field period, with the amount increasing to $100 after an initial non-response.

Interviewers were authorized to offer $150 if necessary.

Fresh web sample. Selected addresses were sent a series of letters to recruit one household member to complete a screening survey. The initial invitation letter included $10 in cash and promised $40 for completing the online survey. The incentive was later escalated to $100 for initial non-respondents. The screening survey was used to randomly select one person from among the adult U.S. citizens living at the address to complete the 2024 questionnaire online.

In cases where the person who completed the screener was not selected to complete the 2024 questionnaire, they received either $40 or $100, as did the selected respondent after they completed the 2024 questionnaire. If the person who completed the screener was selected for the 2024 survey, they received one payment of $40 or $100 after completing both the screener and the 2024 questionnaire.

Panel sample. Panelists were invited by mail, email (when available), or both, and asked to complete the 2024 questionnaire online. Invitations included a prepaid $10 cash incentive with a promise of $40 for completing the survey, which later escalated to $100 after an initial non-response.

Spouse and partner survey. If a respondent in either of the fresh sample groups had a spouse or cohabiting partner, the spouse or partner was invited to complete a brief questionnaire, either by paper or online. Spouses/partners received immediate invitations to participate as soon as the respondent finished their survey. The in-person spouse/partner request was also accompanied by a $5 cash payment. If they were not immediately available, partners from both groups received written invitations. The web sample received an email invitation, and the in-person sample received a paper invitation left behind with the survey and $5 in cash enclosed. Both groups received an initial offer of $20 to complete the survey, which then escalated to $40. Reminders were sent to non-responding spouses/partners, accompanied by paper copies of the questionnaire. In-person non-responding partners were eventually sent web links to complete the survey. The spouse/partner survey was only administered during the pre-election study.

Post-election study

Respondents who completed a survey or a sufficient partial survey in the pre-election study were approached after the election and asked to complete a post-election survey. Potential post-election respondents were initially offered the same incentive amount they received for their pre-election survey. On January 1, 2025, incentive offers of $25 or $50 were increased to $100 for non-finalized in-person cases. On January 13, 2025, incentive offers of $40 were increased to $100 for non-finalized web cases. On January 16, 2025, incentive offers were updated to $200 for resistant non-finalized in-person cases.

Data Collection

Field dates. The ANES 2024 Time Series study conducted a pre-election survey between August 3, 2024, and November 5, 2024. Election Day was November 5, 2024. The study attempted to re-interview the same respondents using a post-election survey between November 7, 2024, and February 17, 2025.

Locations. Interviews in the face-to-face mode were usually conducted in respondents' homes, but could also be conducted at any location convenient for the respondent. Video interviews and web surveys could be completed anywhere the respondent had internet access, whether on a computer or a mobile device. Phone surveys could be completed on any device that had phone service.

Modes of pre-election interview administration. Interviews in the face-to-face mode were conducted by trained interviewers using computer-assisted personal interviewing (CAPI) software on laptop computers. During a portion of the face-to-face interview, the respondent answered certain sensitive questions directly on the laptop computer, without the interviewer's participation (known as computer-assisted self-interviewing or CASI). In the fresh web sample, panel sample, and GSS sample, respondents were eligible to complete the survey in the web mode. Toward the end of the field period, non-respondents in the fresh web sample received a highly abbreviated four-page paper-and-pencil (PAPI) questionnaire, and were able to complete the survey in either the web or paper-and-pencil mode. With the exception of n = 245 paper-and-pencil cases, all other respondents in the fresh web group completed the survey in the web mode. All panel and GSS respondents completed the survey via the web mode. All cases in the fresh in-person sample were initially invited to a face-to-face interview; however, in some cases, the interview was conducted partly or entirely by phone (n = 76) rather than face-to-face (n = 966).

Modes of post-election interview administration. All fresh web, panel, and GSS sample respondents from the pre-election survey were invited to complete the post-election survey using the same mode in which they completed the pre-election survey.

Most in-person sample respondents were offered the opportunity to complete the post-election survey by video. To be eligible to participate in the post-election study using the video mode, respondents had to both 1) have access to the internet at home, and 2) score lower than four on variable IW_RATE, indicating that they liked the pre-election interview. In-person sample respondents who were eligible to participate via video were asked to schedule an appointment during the post-election data collection period.

Respondents who were either not eligible for video, did not set a video appointment, or missed their video appointment received a face-to-face visit for the post-election study. In some cases, respondents in the in-person sample who could not be reached by video or face-to-face were subsequently interviewed by phone. Respondents completing the survey by video or phone had the questions from the CASI portion of the questionnaire read out loud to them by the interviewer.

Interview length. The median administration times for the pre-election interviews, not counting screening procedures, were approximately 93 minutes for the in-person sample, 63 minutes for the fresh web sample, and 72 minutes for the panel sample. The median administration times for the post-election interviews were approximately 99 minutes for the in-person sample, 68 minutes for the fresh web sample, and 71 minutes for the panel sample.

Languages. Interviews were conducted in English or Spanish.

Response Rates

Pre-election interviews were considered sufficient to be counted as completions for weighting and calculation of the response rate when the survey was administered at least to the self-reported gender question (SELFGEND_GENDTYP) at the beginning of the CASI section of the questionnaire (and following other demographic items). Post-election interviews were considered sufficient to be complete if the respondent completed the VOTE section of the instrument. In both the pre- and post-election studies, respondents completing the associated abbreviated paper-and-pencil questionnaire are also counted as sufficient completions.

The following response rates are calculated using the American Association for Public Opinion Research (AAPOR) formula for the minimum response rate, AAPOR Response Rate 1.

The pre-election response rate was 33.4 percent for the fresh in-person sample and 37.7 percent for the fresh web sample. The pre-election re-interview rate for the panel sample (conditional on previously completing the ANES 2016 and 2020 studies and being invited to the 2024 study) was 82.0 percent.

The overall post-election re-interview rate was 89.9 percent of pre-election respondents. The post-election re-interview rate for the fresh in-person sample was 88.8 percent and 85.3 percent for the fresh web sample. The post-election re-interview rate for the panel sample was 95.3 percent.

The pre-election response rates and post-election re-interview rates for the GSS sample will be reported in the supplemental release of those data.

Restricted Data Access

Some variables, including date of birth, the respondent's ZIP code, and verbatim answers to open-ended questions, are coded "-3. Restricted access" on this public use dataset. Data for many of these variables can be obtained through a Restricted Data Access agreement. Please see the ANES website for more information.

Responses to a selection of open-ended questions are made available to the public after the responses have been redacted for confidentiality.

Data Analysis, Weights, and Variance Estimation

Analyses should be weighted to represent the U.S. adult citizen population accurately. Sampling error calculations should account for the complex sample design and the effects of weighting on variance.

The data can be analyzed using the combined fresh sample, the fresh in-person sample alone, or the fresh web sample alone.

Weight variable selection

The list below indicates which weight variable to use for different types of analyses with the full release data. In general, if any post-election data are used for an estimate (alone or in combination with pre-election data), a post-election weight variable should be used, while analyses using solely pre-election data should use a pre-election weight.

Sampling errors and significance testing

The study is not a simple random sample, so statistical procedures for complex sample designs must be used to obtain correct estimates of sampling errors and correct indications of statistical significance. Statistical software such as Stata, R with a survey analysis package, or SPSS with the Complex Samples package can perform a Taylor Series estimation of sampling errors when provided with the appropriate strata and cluster variables. In Stata, the command to set up this type of analysis is as follows:

svyset [pweight=WEIGHT], psu(CLUSTER) strata(STRATA)

For weight	use variance PSU	and use variance stratum
V240101a	V240101c	V240101d
V240101b	V240101c	V240101d
V240102a	V240102c	V240102d
V240102b	V240102c	V240102d
V240103a	V240103c	V240103d
V240103b	V240103c	V240103d
V240104a	V240104c	V240104d

V240105b	V240105c	V240105d
V240106a	V240106c	V240106d
V240106b	V240106c	V240106d
V240107a	V240107c	V240107d

V240108a	V240108c	V240108d
V240108b	V240108c	V240108d

For example, the code to set up Stata for an analysis of the full sample is as follows:

```
svyset [pweight=V240107a], psu(V240107c) strata(V240107d)

A note on subpopulation analysis or analysis with missing data

When conducting design-consistent variance estimation, cases should be selected by designating a subpopulation for the analysis procedure, not by dropping cases from the analysis or excluding missing data listwise. For some analyses the estimated standard errors from these two methods may be the same, or nearly so, but in other circumstances, failing to designate a subpopulation makes the standard error estimates incorrect. Also, in some cases, failing to designate a subpopulation may prevent the calculation of standard errors altogether by reducing the number of cases in a stratum to one. If, for example, Stata's output omits standard errors and includes the note, "Missing standard errors because of stratum with single sampling unit," this is usually because the user has dropped cases (explicitly or through extensive listwise deletion) instead of designating a subpopulation. Designating a subpopulation will solve the problem. In brief, this means using code of the following general form (for proportions from a single variable, in Stata):

svy, subpop(INCLUDE):prop VAR

In this example, INCLUDE is the name of a variable you generate to identify the subpopulation (with included cases coded 1 and excluded case coded 0) and VAR is the name of the variable for which proportions are generated. Similarly, you may use:

svy, subpop(if VAR >=1 & VAR <=5): prop VAR

This example selects cases conditional on VAR having values from 1 through 5. Other statistical software, such as R and SPSS, have comparable procedures. For more information about this kind of procedure, see the How To Analyze ANES Survey Data document linked above or the documentation for the statistical software you use.

A note on weights and modes

The weights are organized by sample group, which is distinct from the mode of interview. As detailed above in the Data Collection section, the fresh in-person sample includes interviews conducted in-person, by telephone, and over live two-way video. Weighting using the "in-person weight" selects the in-person sample, not only face-to-face interviews. Sample and mode can be identified (variables V240002a, V240002b and V240003), but within sample groups, the mode of interview was not randomly assigned, so analysts should be cautious about making mode comparisons or attributing differences among modes of interview to the interview mode itself; apparent mode differences may also be due to selection effects.

Reporting weighted sample sizes

When reporting the sample size (n) for an analysis, the actual, unweighted sample sizes should be reported, and analysts should take care not to confuse weighted sample sizes with unweighted sample sizes. Some statistical software applications make this distinction more readily than others. Generally, software designed for design-consistent survey estimation will report actual sample sizes, but software using non-survey procedures (such as frequency weights) will not. When frequency weights are used, the weighted sample size usually does not reflect the actual number of cases used in an analysis procedure (because weights vary, most analyses will exclude one or more cases due to selection criteria, listwise deletion or both, and the sums of subgroup weights are not constrained to sum to the actual sample size). In this case, in addition to running a weighted analysis, it is necessary to also run an unweighted analysis (taking care to select the same cases) in order to obtain correct sample sizes.

Weighting methods

The weights were computed in multiple steps to account for sample design features and to reduce various non-sampling error sources. The in-person and web pre-election surveys used a similar approach, as follows. Design weights were calculated to account for address sampling probabilities and the within-household selection of a single eligible adult. An adjustment was also performed to handle addresses whose eligibility was not able to be determined, redistributing their design weights to the remaining addresses with a known eligibility from their same corresponding stratum. To address both screening and main survey non-response, a propensity stratification approach was used for each component. In this approach, the probability of each eligible address to complete the survey was estimated using a logistic regression model of survey response over a set of covariates observed for both respondents and non-respondents. The eligible addresses were then divided into deciles of their estimated response propensities and the inverse of the average of these propensities for each decile was used as a non-response adjustment factor. Finally, a calibration adjustment was applied to ensure that the weighted sample distribution matched the population distribution with respect to various characteristics.

Upon some modelling of 2024 turnout and vote choice using ANES data, the following dimensions were ultimately selected to be used in the calibration:

- Race by sex;
- Marital status by sex;
- Educational attainment by age,
- Educational attainment by region;
- Income by race/ethnicity;
- Home tenure;
- Nation of birth;
- Population density;
- Education attainment by metropolitan status.

The following variables (and categories) were used for the calibration:

- Sex (male, female)
- Age (18-29, 30-44, 45-59, 60 years or older)
- Educational attainment (less than high school graduate, high school graduate, some college, college degree, graduate degree)
- Race/ethnicity (non-Hispanic White, non-Hispanic Black, Hispanic, non-Hispanic other)
- Home tenure (home owner, other)
- Nation of birth (U.S. born, foreign born)
- Marital status (married, widowed, divorced or separated, never married)
- Household income (less than $40,000, $40,000-$74,999, $75,000-$124,999, $125,000 or more)
- Population density (less than 471 people/square mile, 471-2,377 people/square mile, 2,377-5,505 people/square mile, more than 5,505 people/square mile)
- Metropolitan status (non-metropolitan, metropolitan)

Missing values in calibration variables were imputed for the purposes of weighting. Population benchmarks (control totals) were based on the 2023 American Community Survey 1-year estimates, except for population density, which was from the 2020 census, and metropolitan status, which was from the March supplement of the 2024 Current Population Survey.

To reduce weighting variability, the final weights were bounded at 5 times the average of their corresponding unbounded calibrated weights.

The panel survey used a similar approach, except that it started with the 2020 ANES final weights as an input weighting variable and only the main survey non-response adjustment and calibration procedure were applied, as the other adjustments were already embedded in the input weight.

Weights for various combinations of the samples (such as weights for the entire sample, or for the in-person and web combined) received two additional adjustments. First, the samples were integrated using a Hartley estimator composite factor. In this process, each sample received a composite factor θ (with $0 < \theta < 1$) proportional to the mean square error of their corresponding estimate for the proportion of Trump voters in the 2024 election. The mean square error was estimated using an estimate of bias and sampling variance. The bias was estimated as the difference between the sample estimate of Trump voter proportions and the true value according to the election results. The sampling variance estimate used respondent data accounting for all the design features, including weights, stratification, and clustering. Second, an additional calibration adjustment, following the same specifications as the initial calibration, was applied over the combined sample.

Orientation to the Data and Documentation

Dataset

The ANES 2024 Time Series Study Full Release is available in multiple file formats: SPSS (.sav), Stata (.dta), Comma Separated Values (.csv), and a fixed-width raw data file that can be read into SAS, SPSS, and Stata using syntax statements that have been provided.

Variables are stored using formats optimized for their data type. Missing data are coded as negative numbers, for instance, "-8. Don't know".

Along with the dataset, users should also download and make use of the two following pieces of documentation:

Questionnaire

The first piece of documentation is the Questionnaire, a document that provides information about each of the questions that were asked in the main survey. The questions in the Questionnaire are presented in the order they were asked. The Questionnaire includes the following information, where applicable, for each question: the section in which the question appears, question name, question wording, universe (where only a subset of respondents was to receive the question, which respondents those should be), and response options.

In addition to the Questionnaire, ANES separately provides the PAPI (paper-and-pencil) and SPS (Spouse and Partner Survey) survey questionnaires in PDF format. Both documents are available for download from the 2024 Time Series study page of the ANES website.

User Guide and Codebook

The second piece of documentation is the User Guide and Codebook. You are currently reading the User Guide, which provides a brief overview of the study and how to use its data and documentation.

The remainder of this file, after the User Guide, consists of the Codebook. Whereas the Questionnaire provides information about the questions asked in the survey, the Codebook provides information about the variables that appear in the dataset.

Questions and variables do not always have a one-to-one relationship. For instance, multiple questions may be combined into a single summary variable. Or various variables may be derived from a single question. Furthermore, not all variables have associated questions — for example, administrative variables.

The Codebook includes the following information, where applicable, for each variable: the variable name (all variable names start with a "V", and summary variables end with the suffix "x"), variable label (with "PRE:" indicating that it is from the pre-election study), simplified question wording, response/code values and meanings, associated survey question(s), universe (where only a subset of respondents appear in a variable, which respondents those should be; note that universes are not included for most summary variables), information about whether randomization was used, and interviewer instructions.

In fact, for some of these questions, if you answer correctly, we will know that you probably looked up the answer. Please do not look up the answers you do not know.
